

April 5, 2010

Greetings:

IEHP is pleased to bring the nationally recognized Delfini Group to San Bernardino on May 26, 2010 to present “How to Read a Study: What You Don’t Know Can Hurt Your Patients.”

Every clinician should have an idea about which sources of information are preferable to answer various clinical questions. Skills are needed in order to:

- Search for relevant information
- Evaluate the quality of the information
- Apply the information to decision-making

An important part of providing high quality clinical care is providing useful (and that often means quantitative) information to those needing to make decisions. Accurate information about benefits and harms affects decisions that our patients make.

Testimonial

“Hi Mike...I thought the subject was going to be boring and not much use...I was very wrong. The conference was excellent and I learned a great deal of new information that will help me in assessing the literature in my job...I cannot thank you and Sheri enough.”

Harold Wittcoff, MD
Chief, Quality & Risk Management
KP Atlanta, Georgia

Delfini brings a wealth of knowledge in helping organizations and individuals learn and apply the concepts, methods, and skills of evidence based clinical improvement to achieve improved outcomes and value in clinical care. Mike Stuart, MD and Sheri Strite, the founders of Delfini, will deliver their presentation on May 26, 2010 from 6.30pm to 8pm. This presentation will be hosted at Inland Empire Health Plan.

At the completion of the seminar, you will be able to evaluate literature in a different way. You will be able to:

1. Define evidence based medicine and discuss its relevance and usefulness
2. Distinguish common shortcomings of published medical literature, including clinical research articles and clinical practice guidelines
3. Understand the need in daily practice to apply techniques for determining the validity and clinical usefulness of clinical research articles

Case reviews of relevant medical care issues facing providers today will also be conducted. Please plan to attend this important seminar. Seating is limited, please RSVP today.
